- Hardbound volumes (generally older than current year; includes loose issues that have not yet been bound)

Microfilm Collection

- Older volumes retained on microfilm; microfilm reader/printer available

Electronic Journals

- Accessible via internet (use A-to-Z hyperlink on library homepage)
- Passwords and log-on information available in LRC Passwords folders near all internet computers
- Includes electronic versions of our print journals as well as access to journals not available in print here
- Full-text databases provide access to thousands of additional journal titles

Databases

- Selected databases are listed on the LRC webpage, especially those to which the library subscribes and which either require a password or recognizes campus IP addresses.
- Many databases use a controlled vocabulary of subject headings (e.g., Medical Subject Headings or MeSH) but may also be searched using keywords, author names and other relevant terms.
- Some databases offer full-text articles.
- Each database varies in the ways in which search retrieval may be limited. Some available limits include: publication date, language, material held by this library, human and animal subjects, and full-text availability.
- Because of the diversity of opinion concerning chiropractic and naturopathic history and philosophy, information located through database searches might be at times contradictory and even questionable, even from fairly reputable databases.
- Information on selected databases is included in your handouts. Descriptions and instructions are readily available within each database's informational features.
- Information located on chiropractic and naturopathic history and philosophy should include references to supportive documents, especially those produced by involved historical persons and by originators and major proponents of the philosophy.

Websites

- Selected websites are listed on the LRC webpage, including those of significant chiropractic and naturopathic organizations.
- These websites usually also provide links to additional relevant websites (e.g., state and national associations) and resources (including full-text articles and documents).
- Websites vary in features, quality of information, bias (especially due to organizational and financial sponsorships) and comprehensiveness, accessibility and ease of use and general strengths and weaknesses as well as absence of technical concerns (e.g., pop-up ads).
- Websites serve as one source of information but information taken from websites needs to be corroborated by database searching and information found in reputable literature.
- Websites maintained by government agencies and established national organizations are the most likely to provide well-balanced verifiable information.
- Information located on chiropractic and naturopathic history and philosophy should include references to supportive documents, especially those produced by involved historical persons and by originators and major proponents of the philosophy.

Other Resources

- Articles and other short publications on significant topics are kept in the metal file cabinets along the south wall near the Miscellaneous Journals.

Realia

- Bone boxes and other anatomical models are available at the Circulation Desk for in-library use. Skeletons are located near the videocassette players in the aisle between the photocopiers and the group study rooms.

Databases & Electronic Journals

Databases & Electronic Journals

Some Internet resources available to NUHS users (including access to full-text journal articles from PubMed searches) require login IDs and/or passwords. For security reasons, IDs and passwords will be changed during trimester breaks. Check here for current information. This list also is available with hyperlinks on the general Cygnet site under Learning Resource Center.

Important messages:

Online access to some journals might not be available due to ongoing subscription changes. Please check with the reference librarian and let him know about these specific problems. This passwords list also is available through your MyNU Student Portal or Faculty Portal using the Database Logins under the Campus Resources menu.

Links are now provided through A-to-Z under Databases on the library webpage for remote (off-campus) access to electronic journals, electronic books and databases which utilize IP address recognition. You should be prompted for a login. You must be registered with this library so that you can use your 14-digit library bar code and your pin number to log in. Contact the library circulation desk if you don't know your pin number.
