Chiropractic student assessment of identity, role and future
Principal Investigator: Jordan Gliedt, D.C. (Logan CC)
NUHS Investigator of Record: Jerrilyn Cambron, D.C., Ph.D.

A complicating factor preventing chiropractic from progressing to its full potential may be its perceived inability to act as a unified group. As factions of the profession are establishing a pathway for chiropractors to assume a primary spine care specialist role, some have asserted this route may not be the route many field providers desire to pursue. The aim of this investigation is to collect and analyze data, via implementation of a survey instrument, concerning chiropractic students’ opinions about chiropractic identity, role and future. Results may yield an insight into future practitioners’ perspective about unifying principles for the profession, thus aiding in chiropractic’s progression area.
